

Dear colleagues,

Foster Care in the Digital Age:

Creating training and resources for foster carers by listening to you.

Would you be willing to give your views in an anonymous survey, to help co-create a training course for foster carers covering online safety and the digital lives of the children they care for? Young people in Dudley have given us vital insights. Now we want to hear your suggestions, ideas and requirements.

The enable project will eventually offer free bespoke training courses for foster carers along with exciting features and live events. To get this right, we are consulting foster carers and children in foster care from the start. Resources, case studies, videos and more will be developed. Let us know how you like to learn! Tell us what you believe foster carers want and need.

Who are we?

enable is a group of partners led by the University of Kingston Department of Psychology and Youthworks, with NAFP and Dudley Council care team. Together we are hoping to co-create a new way of providing that digital knowledge and skills that are so needed in today's world. We are funded by Nominet. The project has been submitted to the ethics committee of the university.

We are asking you to complete a short survey now to inform our training course. We will also collect the views of those who take the course or use the website we build. This is for you and by you.
